Matteo Thun and Antonio Rodriguez's latest effort for the 70-year-old Italian maker, Nice, brings a welcome dose of color to the bath. The faucet set, available here later this year, was inspired by a 1970s design in the company archives: I Balocchi, by Davide Mercatali and Paolo Pedrizzetti. Nice reinterprets its muse's eye-catching colors and pop-art form in a sleeker, more contemporary vein. Flanking the graphic gooseneck or square spout are colorful puck-like controls—actually clear acrylic over a 2mm-thin base layer of jewel-tone methacrylate. “Nice is an homage to the essence of water and its beauty: transparent and fresh,” the designers explain. fantiniusa.com. circle 751 ➤

“Nice is inspired by the DNA of Fantini: the I Balocchi collection’s explosion of color. We riffed on that design to create something contemporary, fresh, and sexy.”
